Neurotoxins in Neurology:
Applying Evidence-Based Methods in Treating Neurological Disorders

October 22, 2011
7:30AM

Loews Hotel
1200 Market Street
Philadelphia, PA, 19107

Presented by the Department of Neurology
Learner Objectives

• Assess the evidence for the use of botulinum toxin in the treatment of headache (migraine, tension headache and chronic daily headache), spasticity and movement disorders

• Employ proper injection techniques when administering botulinum toxin

• Integrate proper dosing strategies for serotypes of botulinum toxin in various neurological disorders

• Incorporate practice guidelines for treating various movement disorders based on recent research on the efficacy of botulinum toxin

• Assess your individual practice in light of the information and discussions during the conference and identify specific strategies to implement as part of a continuing improvement process for their practices
